True or False? Explain your reasoning and justify your answer with at least two examples.

1. The area of a square is twice one of the side lengths of a square.

2. If you know the area of a square, you can determine the side length of the square by cutting the area in half.